Game Summary:

Team Timeout:

THE BEST GAME PLAYED THIS SEASON!

Fast paced. Scoring chances by both teams. Two goalies standing out literally stopping everything throw at them. Shutdown defense controlling this game. This game had everything to make it a very enjoyable game to watch even with a lack of scoring.

Cam-A-Lot gets a much needed win that could turn their season around, as they break a four game winless streak.

The Revolution matches the pace and scoring attempts of their opponent but can't solve the goalie, as they see their two game winning streak ended.

The former "raggedy man" Don MacCini scores the game's only goal at the end of the first period, with a sniper top far corner shot from inside the faceoff circle, scoring his first goal of the season. Donnie was running all game and seemed energized as whispers from the sideline could be heard "what's gotten into Donnie, he is running", as well as "amazing what a new wardrobe look has changed his game."

Goalie Anthony Petrillo is the game's first star, outdueling his counterpart in net, and posting his first shutout of the season as he stops all 26 shots he faces, looking the best he has looked all season.

Earning the game's second star is goalie Scott Rosato, who does everything he can, stopping 29 out of 30 shots faced to give his team a chance to score the tying goal, but suffers a tough loss.

Not to be overlooked is the return to action of the much heralded rookie Cam Long from injury. Playing defense and a lot of minutes, Cam pulled off the very rare feat of not seeing his name on the game sheet, but single-handedly controlling the game from defense with his breakaway speed and uncanny ball control. In this reporters eyes, without a doubt, he was the best player in this game. His ability under pressure to not panic and hold onto the ball putting it into places for his teammates to generate scoring chances was reminiscent of the glory days of Mattie Iannello in its similarity.
