Game Summary:

Team Timeout:

After knocking off one of the league's top teams on Saturday, Hammertime doubles up and knocks off another hot team to extend their winning streak to two games and move into fourth place in the standings. Don't look now, but Hammerime looks like they have found their game and will be a challenge for any team going forward.

Phoenix Rising opens up a two goal lead in the second period, but can't stop the momentum of their opponent nor match their three unanswered goals (scored within two minutes) in the third period.

Rob Sheridan is the difference maker in this game, leading by example (as an unnamed captain of this team?) as he takes over the third period and scores 2-goals while adding an assist, steadily climbing up the leading scorer's list every week.

Patrick Spencer has his third multipoint game in a row, scoring 2-goals while adding 1-assist, scoring the killer insurance goal late in the third period, as he too also continues to trend upwards in the leading scorer's race.

Elder Lopes forgets his game is played at 4:30 but shows up early before the 5:30 game anyway to salvage the last half of his game which immediately pays momentum dividends turning this game around by setting up two goals while playing shutdown defense.

Coincidence that Hammertime has turned around their season now that goalie Dale Mcisaac appears to have returned to his previous past form and recovered from his previous lower body injury from last season?
